

Indiana, the state where I live, currently has a Telephone Privacy law that has dramatically reduced the number of unwanted telemarketing calls I am subjected to. (From 4-5 a day to 1 every couple of weeks.) I am VERY happy with Indiana's current law. I would NOT be in favor of adopting any Federal standard that would preempt Indiana's Telephone Privacy law. (Especially a lower standard that would allow any company that claims I am a "existing customer" to call me at will.) Thank you.
